Feeling so bizarre in this cruise cafeteria tonight or 4 PM. 4:40 PM
Trying not to look through any windows because the skyline's sliding
It's not lunchtime, it's not dinner
I almost spent my own money on a cup of coffee
I don't want pizza
I'm not really hungry
I just got coffee, the cup is so full, I'm scared of spilling it everywhere and embarrassing myself
I don't really know how to feed myself
My cousins aren't here like they were last time
The water was mesmerizing until I started moving
I always feel sick
Wondering who I'm gonna have a crush on
All these people on the ship.
How old are they?
How old am I?
What do you mean I'm not a child anymore?
There's a boy waiting for me when I get back to NY
That's pretty cool

My brain likes to trick me and say I'm not loved
Or say that no one wants to hold my hand
Or give me a kiss
That's not very cool
He didn't know I was going away
I mentioned it at least 3 times
Before or first date
(a week and a half ago)
He told me he remembers everything
"I guess I'm one of those people who stays remembering things."
After he told me his birth time
I'm holding onto that birth chart for dear life
Using it as a map and trying to make sense of him
The other day, he said I was a mystery
"I like you and I wanna figure you out."
That's pretty cool

I also was gonna say I definitely like hanging out with you but I feel like it's a bad time for me to start dating and getting attached to people in a city I'm not gonna be around in much for the next 2-4 years

I definitely will be back to the city though so I'm open to making more friends if that makes sense

The cruise has been really good. I'm having a good time and am glad and grateful that I'm here.

The ocean's sooo beautiful. I really hope I get to go to the beach on this trip. The pools are pretty small and crowded. I've never been one for public pools.

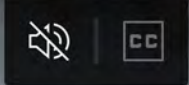

I did get some sunbathing in today which was a priority of mine. I don't remember the last time I sat in the sun and enjoyed it. I'm hoping to get nice and brown by the end of the trip. I found a quiet lounge chair on the west side of the boat and laid there for about 2 hours.

I put sunscreen on which felt nice and moisturizing. And closed my eyes, engaging in how my body felt. The sun tingling my skin and moving to each side of my body made it nice too- I wasn't burning. I sweat while I slept but I didn't feel gross.

I don't have any plans for the rest of the day. Looking forward to feeding my brain with more reading.

Till next time! :)

I am I am I am safe in this moment. now

IAMAFFIRMATIONS.A... IAMAFFIRMATIONS.A...

I let go of feelings that don't add to my happiness.

I believe in myself and I believe in the path I have chosen.

The version of us that exists right now is worthy of compassion.

Attention: We will meet in person this upcoming week in EAST HALL, Rm 304: Contemporary Arts of Africa 22/FA-HAD-454-01

In a hot tub, chatting with a girl from Brighton.

She asks me questions about myself and my life.

She tells me about her family and her eating disorder.

We both say we feel weird being served and waited upon.

Me and a blonde blue-eyed girl from England.

Everyone on this fucking boat is coughing

Myself included

It's my second day having a fever

I've spent so many hours on the CDC website

Trying to determine if I have Covid or the flu

Am I dying?

I wondered every second shivering and sweating under the comforter

in my cabin alone

No one to hear if I dropped dead

from the flu in my room

Am I going to die?

No, I need to see Elinor

I thought

A night or two before, I thought about my cat Elinor and how much I love her

How I've missed her

How I can't wait to see her soon

I stared at pictures of her on my phone and burst into tears

Silently hyperventilating

in the cabin's bathroom

before bed

"I love her so much."

And she's going to die one day

I think about this sometimes

And sometimes the early grief makes my heart explode in the present

As if her dead furry body's in my arms when it isn't

And she's okay, I think

Lying somewhere dreaming about her next meal

Dreaming about eating popeyes and pizza and blueberry apple crumb pie

I love that little freak

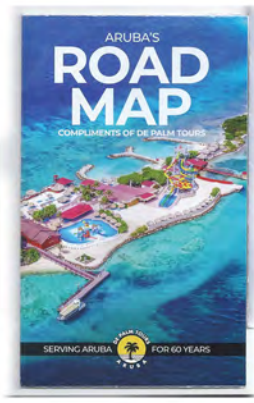

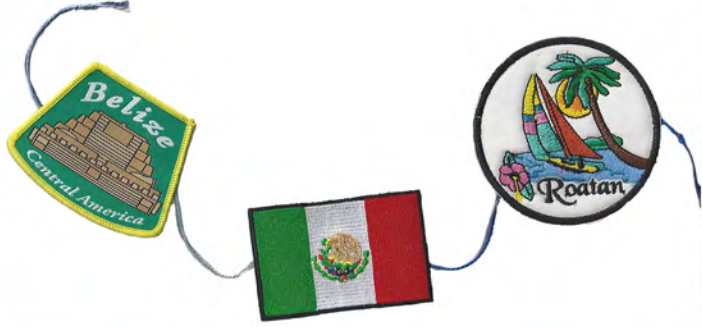

I've never loved anyone more in my entire life

She'll be in my arms soon

And I won't be stuck in Florida with only a suitcase

I won't be severed from my home and my things and my freedom

Again

Artist's Statement

This art book was created a month after returning from this 8-day Caribbean cruise in September of 2022. While traveling from New York to Florida, then on a boat with no access to the internet, I wrote about my observations and feelings on my iPad. It was fascinating to watch people and the decisions they chose like graphic t-shirts or how much of their drink to spill in the pool. I watched the cruise-goers and the crew, feeling strange about my position as a tourist.

Floating on a hunk of metal with my family, with no digital service to anything outside the Carnival app. Surrounded by the beautiful and terrifying ocean, islands with sand and palm trees, sick in bed with severe Covid symptoms. I experienced many ups and downs over 8 days and wanted to record it without specific intentions for its function. This book serves as a memorial and archive to an imperfect vacation and a reminder of the ways I've grown emotionally and physically since then.

I bought this red canvas backpack on Shein during my sophomore year of high school, and I've used it ever since. I believe I brought this bag on my first cruise in 2017, begging my mom to sew up the broken strap because it couldn't part with it yet. The cruise docked in Belize, Mexico, and Honduras and I've had patches of those destinations taped to my bedroom wall since then. I feared ironing them onto anything as if it'd be too permanent. After bringing this backpack to Florida this September, but not on the cruise, I decided it was time for this bag's life to end. Or transform into a new use, a container for the things I wrote and collected on a Carnival cruise in 2022.
